World Energy reaches out to Visitation House
Published by the Catholic Free Press

On Jan. 17, Martin Luther Day, a group of 30 employees from World Energy came to Visitation House to lend a helping hand. They did cleaning and organizing at the 32-room home for pregnant women in crisis, much needed work that wouldn't have gotten done until spring.

“We are truly blessed and grateful to them for their excellent work and thoughtfulness,” said Eve Lindquist, Visitation House executive director.

World Energy is a Worcester-based energy management services company made up of 62 employees. One of their core values is to “honor their responsibilities” to one another, their company and community and so twice a year they reach out to organizations in need to offer their services and assistance with whatever they may need.

Visitation House was referred to them by United Way as a worthy cause. Erin Choquet of World Energy said that she is truly grateful to have found new friends at Visitation House.
